THE BLUE PIG

SUNDAY FAYRE

Served on Sundays only from 12pm – 6pm

HISTORY OF THE BLUE PIG

This hostel has changed it's name four times since it started life as The Black Lion, copied from the pennant of the Baron of Wolvey. In early Chronicles, it was described as, "a timbered and thatched hostel with brew house and spacious stabling".

When the Gloucesters, became large land owners in the area, the name changed to The While Boar's Head (The Gloucester's pennant). After Richard III fell at The Battle of Bosworth, it was changed to The Blue Boar and around 1800 changed to The Blue Pig.

The Inn dates from the early Fifteenth Century; and at one time was a noted place for cock fighting – having it's own cock pit and gallery.

Around 1470 Warwick the King Maker with Duke Clarence partook of refreshment in this hostel, when their armies were encamped in the Village prior to the capture of Edward IV on Wolvey Heath the next day.

It was the main posting house in stagecoach days, when the horses were changed.
